2018 Session - Legislator Comments on Missed Votes

WashingtonVotes contacted the legislators with the highest number of missed votes in their chamber to give them an opportunity to comment on their voting record. Following are the responses received by WashingtonVotes:

State Senators

Sen. Michael Baumgartner:

"My wife suffered a family medical emergency in her 20th week of pregnancy."

Sen. Steve Hobbs:

"Sen. Hobbs is both our lead negotiator on Transportation and more importantly an active member of the National Guard. He is routinely on duty on weekends and because we work so many weekends, especially this year, that accounts for the vast majority of any missed votes."

Sen. Maureen Walsh:

"You can't imagine the guilt I feel in missing more votes/days this year than all of the last 14 years I've been a legislator combined. I suffered a heart attack on Jan. 30 and spent 4 days in 2 different hospitals. Then on Feb. 14 after coming back to work, I was re-admitted to the hospital for liquid around my heart. I am hopeful my constituents will understand and forgive me. Thank you for the opportunity to respond."

State Representatives

Rep. Jake Fey:

"The reason for my missed votes was result of my bout with the flu. As was advised to not show up unless absolutely needed by my physician so that I would not risk getting others sick. I hope that explains my missed votes."

Rep. Christine Kilduff:

"I take my role as a state legislator very seriously. This legislative session my mother took critically ill as a result of long-term illness and then, sadly, passed away. Never having missed a floor vote previously, I ended up missing five days of House business to support my grieving family, including my father, and travel to the East Coast to attend my mother's wake and funeral. This personal family emergency and death caused me to miss roll call votes."

Rep. Liz Pike:

"I was sick with influenza."

Rep. Mike Volz:

"Along with the entire Republican Caucus, I did not vote on SB6199 and was medically excused from the floor during the week of January 29th – February 2nd."
